● HOW MUCH is that doggy in the window? It's the first question you might be tempted to ask when you see those tiny paws, wagging tails, tubby tummies and oh so cute faces in the pet shop. But what you should really ask yourself, says the RSPCA, is whether you can handle the responsibility of raising a pet.

More than 130,000 animals were surrendered to the RSPCA last year, and many were adult versions of those very same puppies and kittens someone thought they couldn't live without. Dr Hugh Wirth, national president of the RSPCA, says "Throughout the year, the RSPCA receives those pets that are no longer wanted because they are past their cute and cuddly stage and need more attention than the owners are prepared to give on an ongoing basis."

Concerned about the plight of unwanted animals, sleepwear designer Peter Alexander has created a set of Puppy Love PJs, $59.50, which were inspired by his own pet pooch, Penny (left). Peter's donating $10 to the RSPCA for every set of Puppy Love PJs sold between June 17 and July 17.

"I love animals so much that it consumes me. When I can do anything to help any cause that deals with them, then I do. The RSPCA is an amazing organisation, with people sharing the same passion as myself," he says. So stay warm this winter in a brand-new pair of PJs, while contributing to a very worthy cause.
